The most important act of the new city council at their first regular meeting Tuesday night was to adop a paving program calling for an outlay of a $65,000 improvements in the city of Wisconsin Rapids to be done this year. Streets to be paved this summer are Vine Street between Second and Third streets, one of the most traversed streets in the city and long in need of paving, Second street south one block beowl Vine street, where there is considerable traffic. First street north between th Gren Bay tracks and the Biron paving project.

On Sigel Road

The program also carries the filling up of the gap on the Sigel road from Fourth and Grant streets one of the important thoroughfares into the city. This stretch of road was regarded as the worst approach to the city of Wisconsin Rapids and the announcement that it is to be paved will be hailed with joy by the people who reside in that district and who come into the city from Sigel and that territory. First avenue south, one block between Grand avenue and Johnson street was included in the paving program for the year. This thoroughfare is in very poor condition and is one of the heaviest travelled of the side streets. Another important part of the program includes the paving of Second avenue south from the intersection near the T. E. Nash home to the corner southwest of the N. Johnson residence.

No Wage Change Yet

City wages of forty-five cents per hour for labor on city jobs and eighty cents per hour for team hire were left unchanged by the council, when no decision of the wages for the year was determined. The matter will likely be disposed of at the next meeting.

Sewer and water was ordered in on Apricot and Third Streets. Witter street sewer and water was ordered extended one block from the present end of the mains.

Purchase School Property

On the suggestion of G. O. Babcock, president of the Board of Education, the council passed a motion authorizing the Board of Education to purchase the site now occupied by the Lowell school from the Naylor estate.

Supt. Doudna also urged the purchase of no speeding signs to be erected on Eighth street and on Fourth Avenue North, the two paved streets which pass city schools, which the council ordered. According to Mr. Doudna, motorists are exceeding the speed limits on those streets, which constitutes a menace to the safety of school children. The police were ordered to keep an especial watch for offenders.

FOX RIVER FLOOD IS NOW RECEDING

MOST SERIOUS DIFFICULTY BELIEVED PASSED; PRESS ACTION TO FORCE OPENING OF DAM GATES

(By Associated Press.)

Oshkosh, Wis., May 3—With the Fox river here gradually falling, flood conditions in this city and vicinity have receded, but it will be some time, even under favorable weather conditions, before the level of Lake Winebago and the Wolf and Fox rivers get back to normal.

In West Algoma where the situation was serious for several weeks, the water has gone down, and except in a few low places, the homes that for many days could be reached only by skiffs and row boats, are now surrounded by dry land again.

Demand Relief

As a result of vigorous protests to the government on the part of the association for relief from high water with headquarters here, one of the nine sluice gates on the Menasha dam was opened yesterday. An attempt will be made to have more opened until the river lowers sufficiently to relieve the threatened damage to the Kimberly locks.

The locks at Kimberly have been fortified with bags of sand to check the action of the flood.

Johnson asserts that the accident happened as Meszhrp was turning across the road into the driveway to his home at Springville, and that photographs and other evidence that he has taken at the spot are sufficient to prove that he was not responsible for the collision.

Leon Laramie of this city, who was a passenger in the Johnson car, is now in the Riverview hopital, where it is stated that his injuries will not prove serious. He was badly cut about the head. Roy Meunier, the other occupant of the car, is suffering from a bruised knee.

Materials Explode

Gaining impetus from a dull rumble of explosions, which firemen believe was caused by building materials stored for use in the present work of raising the roof of the central building, the flames caused a bright glow on the night sky down town.

The White House and Washington monument stood out in striking relief as the bright light of the flames shone on them.

Members of the White House awakened President and Mrs. Harding. They dressed and from a window watched the firemen battle the flames on the nearby treasury.

Firemen Check Flames

When the flames were checked after about thirty minutes fighting, the fire had burned entirely through one section of the super structure of that part of the building that divides the court and had spread to parts of the central portions of the roof.

Estimates place the damage at not more than $75,000.

EXTENSION PLAN CAR LINE DELAYED

L. M. NASH TELLS COUNCIL COMPANY IS UNABLE TO AFFORD EXTENSION OVER THE BRIDGE

Discussion of the proposed extension of the street car line over the bridge to the corner of Second and Vine streets took place at the council meeting Tuesday night, when L. M. Nash, president of the company appeared before the council to outline the situation to the aldermen. It was Mr. Nash's opinion that it would be impossible for the company to lay an extension of the car line over the bridge as he explained the costs would be prohibitive to the company. Other objections, such as the narrow corner on the east side, were raised by Mr. Nash.

Committee To Meet Company

At the conclusion of Mr. Nash's statement, Mayor Roenius announced that a committee of the Board of Public Works was to be appointed to take the matter of extension up with the company, promptly to make a final settlement. The Mayor said that the paving would be laid on the new bridge this year, probably this summer by the same contractor to get the Vine street job and that the state was demanding that a final decision about the car line extension should be made.

Motor Bus Proposed

Mr. Nash was interviewed by the Tribune this afternoon relative to the proposal made that the street car company purchase the Consolidated bus line and operate a bus to connect with the present end of the car line and make a route to the east side of the river, including such places as the high school, cemetery, Biron and other places. Mr. Nash saw the feasibility of such an arrangement saying that the bus line to operate as a feeder to the street car line could provide transportation to the people to such places that a street car line could never go, as it would be out of the question unless the city was many times its present size. The financial side of the bus line connection is being investigated by the company officials.

The Mayor said that the paving would be laid on the new bridge this year, probably this summer by the same contractor to get the Vine street job and that the state was demanding that a final decision about the car line extension should be made.

Motor Bus Proposed

Mr. Nash was interviewed by the Tribune this afternoon relative to the proposal made that the street car company purchase the Consolidated bus line and operate a bus to connect with the present end of the car line and make a route to the east side of the river, including such places as the high school, cemetery, Biron and other places. Mr. Nash saw the feasibility of such an arrangement saying that the bus line to operate as a feeder to the street car line could provide transportation to the people to such places that a street car line could never go, as it would be out of the question unless the city was many times its present size. The financial side of the bus line connection is being investigated by the company officials.

California Cow Produces Record Week's Butter Yield

Delavan, Wis.—Forty pounds of butter in seven days is the production record just anounced for a California cow by Malcolm H. Gardner, superintendent of testing for the Holstein-Friesian Association of America. The cow is Miss Aggie Ormsby Segis, a registered Holstein owned by Fred Hartsook, Lankershim, Cal. Her milk production during the seven days was 644.9 pounds. The test was supervised by the California Agricultural College, the California State Association and the National Holstein Association.

Miss Aggie established a world's record over all breeds for two year olds several months ago, producing in ten months 22,084 pounds of milk, yielding 834.7 pounds of butter, it was stated. The daily average for ten months' test was more than 70 pounds of milk a day, or more than 35 quarts every twenty four hours. She freshened for her last record the last days of March, only a few months after completing the ten months' record, the announcement stated. Less than fifty cows have produced 40 pounds of butter in a week, according to records of the United States Department of Agriculture.

COMMUNITY BEAUTIFUL

The Clean Up and Paint Up idea is no idle fancy. It is intensely serious. In the following epigramatic sentences, one person with a civic consciousness, emphasizes the dangers which lurk in the witner's accumulation of rubbish and dirt. The moral is plain. "Clean up and Paint up":

Following the winter's accumulation of filthy debris in backyards, unless promptly cleaned up and disposed of, sickness and death with their attendant sorrow, suffering and expense, will come. You can not afford to bear the burden.

Therefore, do not delay in putting your premises in clean, healthful condition.

Out of disorder and filth you can make your backyard a source of pleasure, health and profit.

With the coming of warm spring days, there should be a general CLEAN-UP of back yards, lawns should be raked and all dead grass and debris burned.

A filthy yard tells the story of negligence and laziness and shows lack of respect to neighbors.

Let each do his share by improving and beautifying his grounds.

Every improvement made is a boost for your own premises, an asset to your neighborhood and a credit to your city and community.

DON'T WAIT TO SWAT

The efforts of the human race against pests might be more effective if we did not so complacently take for granted that such bugs and insects come into being full grown and active and have their origin in nothing more than nature's desire to play havoc with the works of man.

The best way to deal with these pests is, of course, to carry the war into the enemy's country. For although these our enemies get around pretty well after they are full grown and on the wing, there is a time in their brief existence when they are confined to restricted areas. Mosquitoes lay eggs on the surface of the water. The more out of the way and inaccessible such water is to man the more likely the mosquito is to use it as a breeding place. A tin can in the back yard with a half inch of water in it will supply a whole community with enough mosquitoes to keep the entire population busy chasing them when they are once grown up.

Flies breed in filth and garbage. Such breeding places are as congenial and attractive to them as is a soft nest to a setting hen. By unerring instinct they are drawn to them, and once they have found them, the result is swarms of flies in the months that follow. It is nature's inexorable law that where there are filth and garbage in the spring, there will be flies in the summer.

The best way to forestall this effect is to make man's law that there shall be no exposed filth and garbage as inexorable as nature's law. By a careful cleaning up of such places we can rid ourselves of both mosquitoes and flies. To make this result the more inevitable these pests before they are hatched to remove every possible opportunity for breeding on their part. In proportion as we take seriously our health commissioner's suggestion to dedicate the month of May to such house cleaning we shall have gratifying returns from our efforts in the months to come.

TESTING YOUR TEMPERAMENT

You have a temperament. Everybody has. Old fashioned folk would call it your disposition. But science is following a more modern style. So you might as well get in line and acknowledge that you, too, are carrying a temperament concealed somewhere about your person.

Very well, then, how about getting acquainted with your temperament? It is the child of your moods and the grandchild of your emotions. Want to test it out? If you can stand living with yourself, do this for a month.

When you get up every morning scowl at yourself in the mirror. At the end of the month, say psychologists, your facial map will resemble a sector of no man's land in rainy weather.

Then start smiling at what you see in the mirror on the thirty-first day. You will perk up wonderfully. Friends will marvel at the change that's come over you. And your digestion will be better.

But don't keep up the morning smile too persistently. It may degenerate into a simper. Having let your temperament go to both extremes, take control and regulate it. Let the balance hang just a trifle on the side of the smile, and you will be joyous without becoming chronically sanguine.

Briggs Advises Soybeans To Build Up Light Soils

Seed soybeans to increase the value of your farm. There is no better legume for light, worn-out soils, than the soybean, according to G. E. Briggs, soybean expert of the College of Agriculture. He states that no farmer should be contented without a legume on his farm.

"It was three year ago that Abe Butler bought a farm in Bayfield county," relates Mr. Briggs. "The land was in very poor condition, and covered with quack grass. He was met at the train by a number of sympathetic farmers and was told that he had bought the poorest farm in the community. The farmers told the newcomer that they would share their gardens with him so that he would not starve.

"Abe Butler did not know much about farming, but he knew one thing which many farmers don't know, and that there was a county agent in the county. He was willing to learn. He asked the county agent what to do to make the land productive.

Soybeans were advised by the county agent, and proved excellent. The result was that because of the good yield last fall, he is now getting a cream check of $100 a month. The farm that was once called the poor farm of the community, and had been sold many times, is now a good productive farm because of a legume crop.

Lester Ferguson, a neighbor of Abe Butler saw the results and planted nine acres last year. They were so satisfactory that he expects to plant thirty acres this spring. He states that soybeans cured in cocks as clover hay, when fed to cows, horses and brood sows, never gave better results.

"Let's plant soybeans this spring" urges Mr. Briggs. "Plant at the rate of 2½ to 3½ bushels an acre when broadcasting. This same amount will plant three acres when planted in row."

Plan Formation Of New Political Party In Kansas

Topeka, May 2—The birth of a new political party in Kansas is scheduled for May 4. A state convention called by the Concordia Booster Club, a new political organization of Cloud county, in north-central Kansas, has been called for that day. It will convene here, in Labor Hall, at union labor headquarters.

According to D. R. Coughlin, secretary of the Booster Club, delegates are expected from every county in Kansas. The new party hopes in particular to gain the support of the members of the numerous taxpayers leagues which have sprung up in nearly every county in the state, according to Mr. Coughlin. At a state convention of the county representatives of the taxpayers organizations in Topeka, the proposal to organize a new political party was defeated. The Booster Club's delegate and others put up a fight for the new party idea, and a new convention with a new party as the one goal in sight.

Want Lower Taxes

"Don't know what we will call it," said Secretary Coughlin one of the signers of the party call. "The movement is a general one like the Populist movement in Kansas thirty years ago. We are not lining up with any farmer or labor union organizations, but hope to get support from organizations of all kinds. Names that have been suggested are Progressive, Commonwealth, People's and American. While the main theme is for a reduction in taxes, I hope to see a number of things written into the platform, such as advocating stablization of farm product prices; a cooperative banking law, a constitutional amendment for recall of public officials and repeal of the joint trial court law."

Mr. Coughlin says all the promoters of the movement are farmers.

Des Moines Preparing For Encampment Of Grand Army

Des Moines—Iowa is beginning preparations for entertaining what may be one of the few remaining gatherings of the Grand Army of the Republic, the national encampment of the Civil War veterans to be held here, Sept. 24 to 28.

State officials here announced that the resources of all Iowa would be mustered at Des Moines to care for the thousands of grand army men, expected to come here from all parts of America for the reunion.

Because of the central location of the encampment this year nearly every G. A. R. post in America is expected to have representation at Des Moines next fall.

Advise Sowing Of Rape On Winter Killed Pastures

Madison, Wis.—The college of agriculture in a statement today urges farmers to sow rape, or a mixture of oats, peas and rape, wherever their pastures have been winterkilled, in order that good pasture may be afforded for Wisconsin pigs this year.

"No Wisconsin pork producer has any right to expect a profit from his pigs unless he furnishes them with plenty of good pasture. Pastures are so important in pork production that they make all the difference between profit and loss," Prof. F. B. Morrison says. "The man who fails to provide a good pasture for his pigs this summer will probably find he has lost money in producing pork. On the other hand, his neighbor who has made wise use of pasture crops may still have made a fair profit."

It is pointed out that by providing a pasture through planting of rape and oats, can make up for loss through winter kill.

Boy Scouts

BOY SCOUTS MAKE GOOD DOCTORS

"Two of your boy scouts, by giving first aid treatment to one of my patients while I was out of town the other day, prevented a serious illness," writes a local physician, to Bruce Bindley, president of the local council of Scouts. "I thought their work so fine that I could not let the matter go without a word of praise for them.

"Late one night, a patient suffering from varicose veins of the legs, fell down the cellar stairs, seriously bruising and scratching legs. A hurried call was put in for me, but I was out of town and would not be back until the next day. As I had been on the case for some time the patient objected to having another doctor called and yet the family felt that the matter should be given immediate attention.

Hurry Call for Scouts

"Someone thought of calling in two boy scouts, who lived near. These boys of the first and second class, applied antiseptics and bandages so expertly that infection, which might have followed, was prevented. Had infection occurred the complications might have been most serious.

"When I arrived the next day I was most thankful to find my patient in such splendid condition due to the services rendered by the scouts.

"Too much cannot be said in praise of the first aid treatment being taught the boy scouts. This case is no doubt only one of many, but I could not let it go without expressing my thanks and wishes for the best of luck to the boy scouts in their useful and noble work."

A count used to be a man in charge of a count of 500 persons to whom he was a sort of overlord. This is not true today because of altered political conditions. We still have Counts, but the Count business has changed somewhat.

Business, of all kinds, has undergone something of a revolution. It was not so many years ago that pack peddlers were the sole distributors and transporters of many of the household articles of the day. Their legs set the limits for most distribution problems in those days.

Soybeans were advised by the county agent, and proved excellent. The result was that because of the good yield last fall, he is now getting a cream check of $100 a month. The farm that was once called the poor farm of the community, and had been sold many times, is now a good productive farm because of a legume crop.

Lester Ferguson, a neighbor of Abe Butler saw the results and planted nine acres last year. They were so satisfactory that he expects to plant thirty acres this spring. He states that soybeans cured in cocks as clover hay, when fed to cows, horses and brood sows, never gave better results.

"Let's plant soybeans this spring" urges Mr. Briggs. "Plant at the rate of 2½ to 3½ bushels an acre when broadcasting. This same amount will plant three acres when planted in rows."

Skeels with the violin, Miss Florence Brainhall, vocal and Miss Grace Fairchild, accompanist. Miss Jorgenson is a graduate this year of the musical course at Bethel Academy.

The Rhetoric class held a picnic on Sunday, April 30. All report a very good time.

Plan Formation Of New Political Party In Kansas

Topeka, May 2—The birth of a new political party in Kansas is scheduled for May 4. A state convention called by the Concordia Booster Club, a new political organization of Cloud county, in north-central Kansas, has been called for that day. It will convene here, in Labor Hall, at union labor headquarters.

According to D. R. Coughlin, secretary of the Booster Club, delegates are expected from every county in Kansas. The new party hopes in particular to gain the support of the members of the numerous taxpayers leagues which have sprung up in nearly every county in the state, according to Mr. Coughlin. At a state convention of the county representatives of the taxpayers organizations in Topeka, the proposal to organize a new political party was defeated. The Booster Club's delegates and others put up a fight for the new party idea, and a new convention with a new party as the one goal in sight.

Want Lower Taxes

"Don't know what we will call it," said Secretary Coughlin one of the signers of the party call. "The movement is a good deal like the Populist movement in Kansas thirty years ago. We are not lining up with any farm or labor union organizations, but hope to get support from organizations of all kinds. Names that have been suggested are Progressive, Commonwealth, People's and American. While the main theme is for a reduction in taxes, I hope to see a number of things written into the platform, such as advocating stablization of farm product prices; a cooperative banking law, a constitutional amendment for recall of public officials and repeal of the industrial court law."

Mr. Coughlin says all the promoters of the movement are farmers.

Des Moines Preparing For Encampment Of Grand Army

Des Moines—Iowa is beginning preparations for entertaining what may be one of the few remaining gatherings of the Grand Army of the Republic, the national encampment of the Civil War veterans to be held here, Sept, 24 to 28.

State officials here announced that the resources of all Iowa would be mustered at Des Moines to care for the thousands of grand army men, expected to come here from all parts of America for the reunion.

Because of the central location of the encampment this year nearly every G. A. R. post in America is expected to have representation at Des Moines next fall.

Advise Sowing Of Rape On Winter Killed Pastures

Madison, Wis.—The college of agriculture in a statement today urges farmers to sow rape, or a mixture of oats, peas and rape, wherever their pastures have been winterkilled, in order that good pasture may be afforded for Wisconsin pigs this year.

"No Wisconsin pork producer has any right to expect a profit from his pigs unless he furnishes them with plenty of good pasture. Pastures are so important in pork production that they make all the difference between profit and loss," Prof. F. B. Morrison says. "The man who fails to provide a good pasture for his pigs this summer will probably find he has lost money in producing pork. On the other hand, his neighbor who has made wise use of pasture crops may still have made a fair profit."

It is pointed out that by providing a pasture through planting of rape and oats, can make up for loss through winter kill.

Boy Scouts

BOY SCOUTS MAKE GOOD DOCTORS

"Two of your boy scouts, by giving first aid treatment to one of my patients while I was out of town the other day, prevented a serious illness," writes a local physician, to Bruce Bindley, president of the local council of Scouts. "I thought their work so fine that I could not let the matter go without a word of praise for them.

"Late one night, a patient suffering from varicose veins of the legs, fell down the cellar stairs, seriously bruising and scratching legs. A hurried call was put in for me, but I was out of town and would not be back until the next day. As I had been on the case for some time the patient objected to having another doctor called and yet the family felt that the matter should be given immediate attention.

Hurry Call for Scouts

"Someone thought of calling in two boy scouts, who lived near. These boys of the first and second class, applied antiseptics and bandages so expertly that infection, which might have followed, was prevented. Had infection occurred the complications might have been most serious.

"When I arrived the next day I was most thankful to find my patient in such splendid condition due to the services rendered by the scouts.

"Too much cannot be said in praise of the first aid treatment being taught the boy scouts. This case is no doubt only one of many, but I could not let it go without expressing my thanks and wishes for the best of luck to the boy scouts in their useful and noble work."

Discounting the Count

A count used to be a man in charge of a count of 500 persons to whom he was a sort of overlord. This is not true today because of altered political conditions. We still have Counts, but the Count business has changed somewhat.

Business, of all kinds, has undergone something of a revolution. It was not so many years ago that pack peddlers were the sole distributors and transporters of many of the household articles of the day. Their legs set the limits for most distribution problems in those days.

Modern transportation, progressive sales methods—and advertising—have broken the shackles of time. They make a speedy job of what used to take years. Through advertising many an article has been introduced simultaneously in stores all over the country.

Advertising today is the method used by business to tell you why you should have certain goods and how to identify those goods. The advertisements you find here are a truthful catalog of needed merchandise.

Articles of all kinds and for all purposes are presented in a pleasant way through the medium of type and picture. The outstanding requirements of every member of the family are met by offers of good merchandise of proved value.

Use the advertisements for guid ance and you will be a constant gai ner.

She pressed her lips tight.

"I'm not going to tell—yet. You've got to do something for me first. I'm in trouble—" she was speaking rapidly now, the words flooding over her lips between gasps, her eyes set, her hands knitting.

"He ran away and left me for three days. The fire went out—my baby—" hysterical laughter broke from her dry lips— "My baby died, and still he didn't come. He—"

"Agnes!" Houston grasped her hands. "Try to control yourself! Maybe he couldn't get back. The storm—"

"Yes, the storm! It's always the storm! We would have been married—but there was the storm."

Then she halted, for the briefest part of a moment, to become suddenly madly cajoling, crazily cunning:

"Listen, Barry. You want to know things. I can tell them to you—oh, so many of them. I'll tell them too—if you'll only do this for me. It's my baby—my baby. Won't you promise for me? Take her to a priest—please, Barry—and have her buried in hallowed ground. Won't you, Barry? Do you want me to die too—or do you want me to live and tell you why I did the things I did? Do you want to know who was back of everything? I didn't do it for myself, Barry. It was some one else—I'll help you, Barry, honestly I'll help you."

"About the murder?" Houston was leaning forward now, tense, hopeful. But the woman shook her head.

"No—the lease, and the contract. I'll help you about that—if you'll help me. Take my baby—"

The man rose.

"I'll promise, Agnes. If you want to help me afterward, well and good. If not—you are free to do as you please."

The woman had raised eagerly. "Then look in a box in the top drawer. You'll find a crucifix. They—they might want to put it on her."

In a mass of tangled, old-fashioned jewelry, he found the crucifix, its chain broken and twisted, and placed it in a packet. Then he turned to the grimmer task—and the good-by. A half hour later, white-featured, his arms cupped gently about a blanket-wrapped form, he stepped forth into the storm, and bending against the wind, turned toward the railroad in obedience to the hazy directions of the sobbing woman he had left behind.

The snowfall was lighter now; he could find his way more easily.

Black splotches against the snow, two figures suddenly had come out of the sweeping veil—a girl and a man. Something akin to panic seized Houston. The man was Lost Wing. The girl was Medaine Robinette.

Medaine's eyes went with womanly instinct to the bundle in his arms.

"A baby!" There was surprise in her tone. Forgetting for the moment her aversion to the man himself, she came forward, touching the blankets, then lifting one edge ever so slightly that she might peer beneath. "Where did you find it? Whose is it?"

Houston sought vainly for words. And the words seemed to come unbidden:

"Does it matter?"

"Of course not." She looked at him queerly. "I merely thought I could be of assistance."

"You can. Tell me where I can find a priest—the baby is dead."

"Oh." She touched the bundle ever so softly. "I didn't know." Then with a sudden thought: "But her mother. She must need—"

"Only a doctor. I will try to get Batiste to come out."

"But couldn't I—"

"I'm sorry." He felt that he was making himself hopelessly. He wanted to tell the truth, to ask her aid, to send her back into the woods to the assistance of the stricken woman there. But he could not frame the request. Instead, "I—I can't tell you. I've given a woman my word. She wouldn't understand—if you went there. With Batiste, it is different. He is a doctor. He has a right. I—I—"

"I understand," came quietly, and in those two words Houston felt that her opinion had been formed; that to her, he was the father; the quiet form in his arms his own child!

"You are asking something almost impossible. The nearest priest is at a settlement near Crestline.

"Crestline?" Houston instinctively turned toward the hills, a bleak, forbidding wall against the sky. "Will you lend me Lost Wing to run an errand? I want to get Batiste—for her."

"Certainly."

She spoke to the Indian in Sioux then and drew away. Houston, pointing with his head instructed the redskin.

The Sioux started on, soon to be engulfed in the swirling veil of the storm. Barry turned again to the girl.

"Just one more request: I can't carry the child up there—this way. Will you help strap her to my pack?"

Silently she assisted him in the grim task of mercy. Then:

"Do you know the Pass?"

He shook his head. She tapped one glove against the other.

"It is impossible then. You—"

"I'll make it some way. Thank you—for helping me."

He started on. But she called him back.

"It's dangerous—too dangerous," in there was a note of pity in her voice. "It's bad enough on foot when there's no snow—if you're not familiar with it. I—"

"Tell me the way. Perhaps I could find it. It's not for myself. I made a promise to the child's mother. I'm afraid she's dying."

A new light came into the girl's eyes, a light of compassion, of utmost pity. Slowly she came toward Houston, then bent to tighten the fastenings on her snowshoes.

"I know the way," came quietly. "I have been over it—in summer and winter. I will show you."

"You! Medaine! I—I—beg pardon." The outburst had passed his lips almost before he realized it. "Miss Robinette, you don't know what you're saying."

"I know the way," she answered, without indicating that she had heard his remonstrance. "I am glad to go—for the sake of—" She nodded slightly toward the tenderly wrapped bundle on the pack. "I would not feel right otherwise."

CHAPTER XVIII

An hour found them in the hills, plodding steadily upward, following the smoother mounds of snow which indicated heavy, secure drifts. As they went higher, and the wind beat against them with its hail of splintered ice particles, Houston saw her heavily gloved hands go to her face in sudden pain and remain there. The man went to her side, and grasping her by the shoulder, stopped her. Then, without explanation, he brought forth a heavy bandanna handkerchief and tied it about her features, as high as possible without shutting off the sight. Her eyes thanked him. They went on.

"A mile more."

She said no more. He nodded in answer and extended a hand to aid her over a slippery stretch of ice-coated granite. The snowfall ceased, to give way to spasmodic flurries of driving white. And it was in one of the moments of quiet that Medaine pointed above.

Five splotches showed on the mountain side—the roofs of as many cabins; the rest of them were buried in snow. No smoke came from the slanting chimneys; no avenues were shoveled to the doorways.

"Gone!" Houston voiced the monosyllable.

"Yes. Probably to Crestline. It's too late to turn back now."

She looked at him queerly, then turned away. At last they reached the cabins. There was no wood; he tore the clapboards from a nearby cabin and the tar paper from the wind-swept roof. Five minutes later a fire was booming; a girl tired, bent-shouldered, her eyes drooping from a sudden desire for sleep, huddled near it. Houston walked to the pack and took food.

"I shall be in the next cabin—awake."

"Awake?"

"Yes. I'd rather—keep watch."

"But there is nothing—"

"Illness—a snowslide—a fresh drift. I would feel easier in mind. Good night."

Then with his snowshoes and his pack of death, he went out the door, to plunge through another drift, to force his way into a cabin, and there go soddenly about the duties of comfort.

The wind-swept night became wind-swept dawn, to find him still grim and drawn and haggard with sleeplessness and fatigue. Then he rose at a call from without:

"Are you ready?"

He affixed the pack. Together they went on again, graceless figures in frozen clothing, she pointing the way, he aiding her with his strength, in the final battle toward the summit of the range—and Crestline.

Noon. And a half-cry from both of them, a burst of energy which soon faded. For above was Crestline—even as the little settlement had been—smokeless, lifeless. They had gone from here also, hurrying humans fleeing with the last snowplow before the tempest, beings afraid to remain, once the lines of communication were broken.

Roofless houses met them, stacks of crumpled snow, where the beams had cracked beneath the weight of high piled drifts; staring, glassless windows and rooms filled with white. Gloomily Houston surveyed the desolate picture, at last to turn to the girl.

QUEEN MARIE TO POSTPONE VISIT

APPROACHING MARRIAGE OF HER DAUGHTER TO KING ALEXANDER OF JUGOSLAVIA MAKES TRIP IMPOSSIBLE

Sibu (Hermannstadt), Transylvania—Queen Marie of Rumania probably will be obliged to defer her long-contemplated trip to the United States until next year.

She had hoped to visit New York prior to the coronation of herself and King Ferdinand, which will take place here August 16, but the wedding of her second daughter, Marie, to King Alexander of Jugoslavia, early in June, will make it impossible.

Then she has a number of official visits to make this year to European countries so that a voyage to America

after the coronation in August is extremely improbable.

The popular Rumanian Queen desires to express her warm appreciation and thanks for the many invitations she has received from women's civic societies, other organizations and personal friends in the United States urging her to visit America this year.

She has even had invitations from motion-picture concerns, one of which offered her a flattering sum to appear in an American scenario as "Queen of the Movies." She obviously had to decline these novel tenders.

Plan Ceremonies

The coronation ceremonies, which will take place in the heart of the beautiful Transylvanian Alps, will be on a scale of lavishness and regal grandeur hitherto unknown in the Balkans. A magnificent cathedral of Byzantine design, costing millions of francs, has been especially erected in Sibiu for the crowning of Europe's most beautiful Queen and King Ferdinand. The Rumanian parliament has appropriated an immense sum for the event. Most of the reigning sovereigns and heads of state throughout Europe have been invited. It is hoped here President Harding will send someone to represent the United States.

Coronation Postponed

King Ferdinand and Queen Marie ascended the throne just before the beginning of the world war, and the continuance of the struggle made it necessary to postpone the coronation from year to year. August 16, which has been finally chosen for the event, is the anniversary of Rumania's entry into the war.

Massive crowns of gold, surmounted by rare stones, have been made for the Rumanian rulers and the Queen has replaced all her precious jewels which were confiscated by the Bolsheviki early in the war by gems and jewelry of even greater beauty and worth. Her pearls alone are said to represent millions of francs.

Perhaps Adam's temper, when he tried to spade the Garden of Eden, had something to do with his downfall.

We shouldn't so much mind legless men operating flivvers as a news item informs us they can do if only brainless men wouldn't try it too.

"Of course not." She looked at him queerly. "I merely thought I could be of assistance."

"You can. Tell me where I can find a priest—the baby is dead."

"Oh." She touched the bundle ever so softly. "I didn't know." Then with a sudden thought; "But her mother. She must need—"

"Only a doctor. I will try to get Ba'tiste to come out."

"But couldn't I—"

"I'm sorry." He felt that he was miring himself hopelessly. He wanted to tell the truth, to ask her aid, to send her back into the woods to the assistance of the stricken woman there. But he could not frame the request. Instead, "I—I can't tell you. I've given a woman my word. She wouldn't understand—if you went there. With Ba'tiste, it is different. He is a doctor. He has a right. I—I—"

"I understand," came quietly, and in those two words Houston felt that her opinion had been formed; that to her, he was the father; the quiet form in his arms his own child!

"You are asking something almost impossible. The nearest priest is at a settlement near Crestline.

"Crestline?" Houston instinctively turns toward the hills, a bleak, forbidding wall against the sky. "Will you lend me Lost Wing to run an errand? I want to get Ba'tiste—for her."

"Certainly."

She spoke to the Indian in Sioux then and drew away. Houston, pointing with his head instructed the redskin.

The Sioux started on, soon to be engulfed in the swirling veil of the storm. Barry turned again to the girl.

"Just one more request: I can't carry the child up there—this way. Will you help strap her to my pack?"

Silently she assisted him in the grim task of mercy. Then:

"Do you know the Pass?"

He shook his head. She tapped one glove against the other.

"It is impossible then. You—"

"I'll make it some way. Thank you—for helping me."

He started on. But she called him back.

"It's dangerous—too dangerous," an there was a note of pity in her voice. "It's bad enough on foot when there's no snow—if you're not familiar with it. I—"

"Tell me the way. Perhaps I could find it. It's not for myself. I made a promise to the child's mother. I'm afraid she's dying."

A new light came into the girl's eyes, a light of compassion, of utmost pity. Slowly she came toward Houston, then bent to tighten the fastenings on her snowshoes.

"I know the way," came quietly. "I have been over it—in summer and winter. I will show you."

"You! Medaine! I—I—beg pardon." The outburst had passed his lips almost before he realized it. "Miss Robinette, you don't know what you're saying."

"I know the way," she answered, without indicating that she had heard his remonstrance. "I am glad to go—for the sake of—" She nodded slightly toward the tenderly wrapped bundle on the pack. "I would not feel right otherwise."

CHAPTER XVIII

An hour found them in the hills, plodding steadily upward, following the smoother mounds of snow which indicated heavy, secure drifts. As they went higher, and the wind beat against them with its hail of splintered ice particles, Houston saw her heavily gloved hands go to her face in sudden pain and remain there. The man went to her side, and grasping her by the shoulder, stopped her. Then, without explanation, he brought forth a heavy bandanna handkerchief and tied it about her features, as high as possible without shutting off the sight. Her eyes thanked him. They went on.

"A mile more."

She said no more. He nodded in answer and extended a hand to aid her over a slippery stretch of ice-coated granite. The snowfall ceased, to give way to spasmodic flurries of driving white. And it was in one of the moments of quiet that Medaine pointed above.

Five splotches showed on the mountain side—the roofs of as many cabins; the rest of them were buried in snow. No smoke came from the slanting chimneys; no avenues were shoveled to the doorways.

"Gone!" Houston voiced the monosyllable.

"Yes. Probably to Crestline. It's too late to turn back now."

She looked at him queerly, then turned away. At last they reached the cabins. There was no wood; he tore the clapboards from a nearby cabin and the tar paper from the wind-swept roof. Five minutes later a fire was booming; a girl tired, bent-shouldered, her eyes drooping from a sudden desire for sleep, huddled near it. Houston walked to the pack and took food.

"I shall be in the next cabin—awake."

"Awake?"

"Yes. I'd rather—keep watch."

"But there is nothing—"

"Illness—a snowslide—a fresh drift. I would feel easier in mind. Good night."

Then with his snowshoes and his pack of death, he went out the door, to plunge through another drift, to force his way into a cabin, and there go suddenly about the duties of comfort.

The wind-swept night became wind-swept dawn, to find him still grim and drawn and haggard with sleeplessness and fatigue. Then he rose at a call from without:

"Are you ready?"

He affixed the pack. Together they went on again, graceless figures in frozen clothing, she pointing the way, he aiding her with his strength, in the final battle toward the summit of the range—and Crestline.

Noon. And a half-cry from both of them, a burst of energy which soon faded. For above was Crestline—even as the little settlement had been—smokeless, lifeless. They had gone from here also, hurrying humans fleeing with the last snowplow before the tempest, beings afraid to remain, once the lines of communication were broken.

Roofless houses met them, stacks of crumpled snow, where the beams had cracked beneath the weight of high piled drifts; staring, glassless windows and rooms filled with white. Gloomily Houston surveyed the desolate picture, at last to turn to the girl.

QUEEN MARIE TO POSTPONE VISIT

APPROACHING MARRIAGE OF HER DAUGHTER TO KING ALEXANDER OF JUGOSLAVIA MAKES TRIP IMPOSSIBLE

Sibu (Hermannstadt), Transylvania—Queen Marie of Rumania probably will be obliged to defer her long-contemplated trip to the United States until next year.

She had hoped to visit New York prior to the coronation of herself and King Ferdinand, which will take place here August 16, but the wedding of her second daughter, Marie, to King Alexander of Jugoslavia, early in June, will make it impossible.

Then she has a number of official visits to make this year to European countries so that a voyage to America

after the coronation in August is extremely improbable.

The popular Rumanian Queen desires to express her warm appreciation and thanks for the many invitations she has received from women's civic societies, other organizations and personal friends in the United States urging her to visit America this year.

She has even had invitations from motion-picture concerns, one of which offered her a flattering sum to appear in an American scenario as "Queen of the Movies." She obviously had to decline these novel tenders.

Plan Ceremonies

The coronation ceremonies, which will take place in the heart of the beautiful Transylvanian Alps, will be on a scale of lavishness and regal grandeur hitherto unknown in the Balkans. A magnificent cathedral of Byzantine design, costing millions of francs, has been especially erected in Sibiu for the crowning of Europe's most beautiful Queen and King Ferdinand. The Rumanian parliament has appropriated an immense sum for the event. Most of the reigning sovereigns and heads of state throughout Europe have been invited. It is hoped here President Harding will send someone to represent the United States.

Coronation Postponed

King Ferdinand and Queen Marie ascended the throne just before the beginning of the world war, and the continuance of the struggle made it necessary to postpone the coronation from year to year. August 16, which has been finally chosen for the event, is the anniversary of Rumania's entry into the war.

Massive crowns of gold, surmounted by rare stones, have been made for the Rumanian rulers and the Queen has replaced all her precious jewels which were confiscated by the Bolsheviki early in the war by gems and jewelry of even greater beauty and worth. Her pearls alone are said to represent millions of francs.

Perhaps Adam's temper, when he tried to spade the Garden of Eden, had something to do with his downfall.

We shouldn't so much mind legless men operating flivvers as a news item informs us they can do if only brainless men wouldn't try it too.

Full Dress In Morning Is Style In Argentine

Buenos Aires—Full dress clothes in broad daylight are in accord with the Argentine policy of "diplomatic simplicity' which taboos silk knee breeches for high civilian functionaries, it was noted when John Wallace Riddle, the new American Ambassador, presented his credentials to President Yrigoyen at Casa Rosada. Argentine statesemen have found for en at morning functions the president and his ministers shall wear full evening dress.

This departure, which would shock Washington or any of the European capitals, is the only alternative Argentine stacsmen have found for the cutaway or morning coat and striped trousers worn at daylight affairs in other countries but which are practically every-day togs here.

Warn Farmers Against So-Called "Soil Vaccine"

Madison, Wis.—Farmers in Wisconsin were warned against purchasing a product known as "soil vaccine," by C. P. Norgord, commissioner of agriculture.

Because of certain bacteria said to be contained in the so-called "vaccine," the manufacturer is said to claim marvellous increases in crop production from use of the substance. Mr. Norgord declares, however, that investigations made in Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio and Canada, do not support these claims.

Before a product of this character is sold in Wisconsin, it is pointed out that a permit be secured from the department of agriculture. "In view of the disinterested information obtained by Agricultural colleges and others, the department will not issue a permit for the sale of this product until such time as contradictory evidence is offered by equally reliable sources," Mr. Norgord said.

He advises that persons or firms offering "soil Vaccine" for sale in Wisconsin will be prosecuted, and states that no one should take an agency for products of this kind without ascertaining first if they can be sold in compliance with the law.

Buenos Aires—Full dress clothes in broad daylight are in accord with the Argentine policy of "diplomatic simplicity" which taboos silk knee breeches for high civilian functionaries, it was noted when John Wallace Riddle, the new American Ambassador, presented his credentials to President Yrigoyen at Casa Rosada. Argentine statesemen have found for en at morning functions the president and his ministers shall wear full evening dress.

This departure, which would shock Washington or any of the European capitals, is the only alternative Argentine staesmen have found for the cutaway or morning coat and striped trousers worn at daylight affairs in other countries but which are practically every-day togs here.

Warn Farmers Against So-Called "Soil Vaccine"

Madison, Wis.—Farmers in Wisconsin were warned against purchasing a product known as "soil vaccine," by C. P. Norgord, commissioner of agriculture.

Because of certain bacteria said to be contained in the so-called "vaccine," the manufacturer is said to claim marvellous increases in crop production from use of the substance. Mr. Norgord declares, however, that investigations made in Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio and Canada, do not support these claims.

Before a product of this character is sold in Wisconsin, it is pointed out that a permit be secured from the department of agriculture. "In view of the disinterested information obtained by Agricultural colleges and others, the department will not issue a permit for the sale of this product until such time as contradictory evidence is offered by equally reliable sources," Mr. Norgord said.

He advises that persons or firms offering "soil Vaccine" for sale in Wisconsin will be prosecuted, and states that no one should take an agency for products of this kind without ascertaining first if they can be sold in compliance with the law.

BURKARTH GETS APPETITE BACK, GAINS 14 POUNDS

My Friends Couldn't Have Done Me A Better Kindness Than When They Urged Me To Take Tanlac, Says Milwaukee Man.

"My friends couldn't have done me a greater kindness than by advising me to take Tanlac," said William Burkarth,, 434 Grove St., highly respected and life-long resident of Milwaukee. "I was in a mighty bad fix since my stomach began to bother me about four years ago. My indigestion was so bad I was afraid to eat many things because of the suffering afterwards from gas and awful pains. I was nervous, run down and didn't know what it was to get a good night's rest.

"Well, Tanlac has relieved all my troubles, given me an enormous appetite and built me up 14 pounds. I feel fine in every way and just can't speak too highly of this wonderful medicine."

ILLINOIS TO TRY MEANWELL SYSTEM

J. CRAIG RUBY, DISCIPLE OF BADGER MENTOR, WILL HANDLE BASKET BALL AT CHAMPAIGN NEXT YEAR

Urbana, Ill.—The University of Illinois has added J. Craig Ruby to its coaching staff to replace Frank J. Winters as basketball coach, and Geo. Huff, director of athletics, believes that the change will develop a new style of cage play for the Orange and Blue tossers next season.

Coach Ruby will have complete charge of both varsity and freshman varsity basketball. However, assistant Coach Burt Ingwerson will coach the yearling, for it is Mr. Huff's idea to start a new system of basketball playing here for the Indian basketeers and Ruby was selected to start the ball rolling in that direction.

Star At Missouri

Ruby's past record has been short but sensational. He graduated from the University of Missouri in 1920 as one of the best forwards who ever played in the Missouri valley conference. In the Fall of 1920 he returned to Missouri as basketball coach after the Tiger players petitioned for him to take the place of Doc. W. E. Meanwell, who stepped into the Big Ten conference circle when he went to Wisconsin. During his first year, Missouri won the valley title, and this season his team tied for top honors with the University of Kansas quintet.

For three years Ruby played under Doc Meanwell's coaching and when his short-pass system was continued at Missouri, it worked for two more titles. The new coach says he will drill the Illini cagers in the short-pass game, which has made the Missouri team and its two coaches famous.

Plenty of Material

Coming to Illinois at a time when the Illini will be strongly fortified with basketball players, Coach Ruby is expected to score an immediate success, for he will have the following veterans on the squad next year: Swede Hellstrom, Evanston; Roland Pojken, Oak Park; G. E. Potter, Orange, Cal.; Otto Vogel, Davenport, Ia.; Walter Roettger; L. Stillwell, Olney. Besides these men, there are five real stars on the freshman squad who will bear much watching.

Johnny Tu-pants Says

Aint it funny?

Ain't it funny what a lot of difference shoes make in the way a boy looks. Rig him up in corking duds, top him off with a dandy hat or cap, steal a peacock's tail and wear it for a tie, and if his shoes are on the bum, he looks like a chrome. That's why this store caters to boys so strong in shoes. That's why the shoes are made to wear long and stand rough-house scuffling. That's why they have shape and style—look snippious. Boys' shoes are a mighty big part of a boy. Dad don't want to be digging ever so often to buy shoes—he gets that tired feelin'. But you don't hear him growl "Great Guns, not another pair of shoes again!" No, sree! This is the store for long shoes, strong shoes, stylish shoes—all shapes and up to the notch. And cheap—Say, you wouldn't believe me. "Johnny, you're spoofing." Well, drop in and see if I am. You'll say "Johnny, old top, you're it."

JOHNNY TUPANTS.

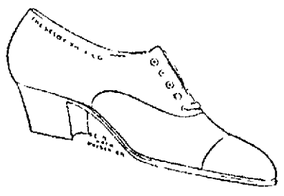
Look at the picture here showing the bones of the human foot. See why they sag when there is nothing to support the arch? Nature intended for the foot to walk flat on the ground. Yet heels are alright; if there is proper support between the heel and the front of the foot.



Arch Preserver Shoes have a concealed built-in arch bridge. It acts the same as the ground when you walk barefooted. It keeps your feet upstanding, vigorous, healthy—and always comfortable.

Johnny Tu-pants Says

Aint it funny?

Ain't it funny what a lot of difference shoes make in the way a boy looks. Rig him up in corking duds, top him off with a dandy hat or cap, steal a peacock's tail and wear it for a tie, and if his shoes are on the bum, he looks like a chrome. That's why this store caters to boys so strong in shoes. That's why the shoes are made to wear long and stand rough-house scuffling. That's why they have shape and style—look snippitious. Boys' shoes are a mighty big part of a boy. Dad don't want to be digging ever so often to buy shoes—he gets that tired feelin'. But you don't hear him growl "Great Guns, not another pair of shoes again!" No, siree! This is the store for long shoes, strong shoes, stylish shoes—all shapes and up to the notch. And cheap—Say, you wouldn't believe me. "Johnny, you're spoofing." Well, drop in and see if I am. You'll say "Johnny, old top, you're it."

JOHNNY TUPANTS.

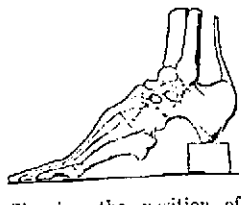
ARCH PRESERVER SHOE REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

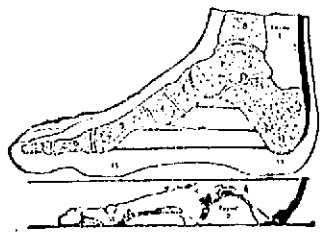
THIS TRADE MARK ON THE SOLE AND ON THE LINING IS YOUR GUARANTY OF

A SMART SHOE WITH THE BUILT-IN SUPPORT THAT NATURE REQUIRES



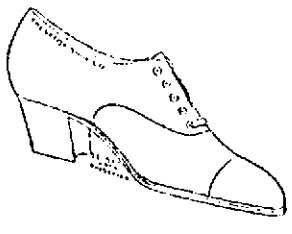
Showing the position of the foot with a heel.

Look at the picture here showing the bones of the human foot. See why they sag when there is nothing to support the arch? Nature intended for the foot to walk flat on the ground. Yet heels are alright; if there is proper support between the heel and the front of the foot.



Showing a Normal Foot

Arch Preserver Shoes have a concealed built-in arch bridge. It acts the same as the ground when you walk barefooted. It keeps your feet upstanding, vigorous, healthy—and always comfortable.



Only in Arch Preserver Shoes can you get the advantages of both correct design and up-to-date styles. Therefore, no other shoes can give you such a large measure of satisfaction.
